Jind: Entrenched in the past, looking at tomorrow

The city of Jind prides in being at the centre of the Indus Valley Civilisation that once thrived in the region. Now extinct, the Deoha River washed the northern banks of the Jind District. By the times of the Mauryans, the city became an important trading centre on the Uttarpath on which the Grand Trunk Road was built during the medieval times.

Today, Jind stands as a forward looking city, home to some of the leading contributors to India's current industrial success. To couple with this, the city also boasts of some of the famous JK Business School and the Government Post Graduate College.

Jind, with a population of 14,33,279 people, acts as a great gateway to Punjab for Haryana. And though, it is fast becoming a centre of India's uninterrupted growth, it boasts of ancient cities like Rakhigarhi and Birranha in its backyard.

Today the city looks towards tomorrow offering opportunities to new businesses like jewellery, edible oils, pharmaceuticals, agro-exports and textiles, etc.
